Tiredness
Weakness
Lack of energy
Sleepiness
Terms used by the medical profession for different sorts of tiredness:
Fatigue: the tiredness felt by normal individuals after vigorous exercise or prolonged intellectual work with normal sleep/wake rhythm.
When relieved by restful sleep, this is not a pathological symptom.
Pathological fatigue: is therefore experienced by individuals who have some sort of medical condition, and who experience fatigue after minimal physical or mental effort , or fatigue that is not relieved by restful sleep.
Malaise: from the French word for ?not feeling well'. A non-specific term, it involves more than just tiredness.

Asthenia: is another term for pathological fatigue: that is, abnormally pronounced fatigue associated with illness.

In this article I shall be discussing pathological fatigue, (asthenia), which is quite different in intensity from normal fatigue.
